History:

The University of Hawaii's Cooperative Extension Service (CES) is under the College of Tropical Agriculture and Human Resources (CTAHR). CES is a component of land grant universities that provides information and education in agriculture, natural resources, and human resources through a partnership with federal, state, and local governments.

The CES was established in Hawai'i in 1928 with a focus on home economics, animal husbandry, farm economics and marketing, and forestry. Each county had a CTAHR administrator and county extension agents. These agents provided workshops, courses, and consultations on their area of expertise. Some of the projects in those initial years included food, clothing, poultry, coffee, gardens, and rabbits. Over time the CES made major contributions in agriculture, youth development, family and community development, leadership development, and natural resources. Inclusion of 4-H clubs, which began in Hawai'i in 1918, was a natural step for the CES, many programs offered to adults were also made available to Hawai'i's youth.

As a home economist, Masako Ohama (June 15, 1925 - March 13, 2013) worked as a Kauai County extension agent for about twenty years, retiring in June 2001. Her aim was to help individuals gain knowledge, skills, and self-confidence to strengthen the family unit. She was in charge of Family Community Education (formerly Hawai'i Extension Homemaker Council) and other adult Home Economics programs. She worked with the Kaua'i 4-H programs and other youth programs. She shared her many talents in food, nutrition, cooking, sewing, and crafts and was instrumental in publishing the Kaua'i Family Community Education (FCE) Cookbook. After her retirement she continued to be associated with Kaua'i as a member of the Lihu'e FCE Club. (Article in the Apr-May-June 2001 KAFCE Newsletter)

Photographs

During her tenure she took hundreds of photographs of a large variety of community functions and events, including local and statewide conventions and conferences, workshops focusing on home economics skills, health fairs, family community leadership training, University Extension programs, Community Pride gatherings, and 4-H Leadership activities.
